The project represents the synthesis of the world-city described by Augé. The system of ropes, that identifies a new suspended floor, is the representation of the networks of circulation, consumption and communication. It identifies multiple poles, which are reflected in the form of vertical elements with tablets that are in live connection with some Public Spaces in the world. The public spaces around the world are brought into connection with each other by the network. Even if they are strongly present, they still have a certain detachment from the common ground. The soil is left free, in opposition to the rigid frame of the networks, because is the public space where everyone can "live" it as he wants.
